

Dear Sr.

It is my opinion that the FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. The State of Indiana has a proper level of protection and I believe we should keep it the way it is. The Federal Law should give states a minimum and not a maximum on the protections the States are willing to provide to their residents.

The Indiana Law, as it is, has raised my quality of life and that of the rest of the members of my family. I used to receive 10 to 14 calls per week, now I only receive one and that has made the quality time I spend at home much enjoyable. We would really appreciate if you do not lessen the protection the State of Indiana grants to us by implementing a law of that cannot but damage the quality of our life by allowing the telemarketing industry to take over the time I should be spending with my family.

Please, dictate a law of minimums, so everyone within the USA has a certain protection of their telephone privacy, but do not limit the amount of such protection each State is willing to grant to their people!

Thanks you.

P. Roman
